DESIGN FOR THE EVOLUTION OF WORK.

What can businesses do to balance working in an office with working from home? We asked the experts at Gensler and here are their suggestions:

SUPERCHARGE THE WORKPLACE

Upgrade the look and feel of typical office environments, making them more stylish, upscale, interesting and inspiring. Provide office workers with amenities they can't have at home, like a variety of dining options, fitness facilities, relaxation spaces and areas where they will enjoy interacting with coworkers. Give workers room to roam, inside and out. Many have become accustomed to moving about during their workdays at home. Let them continue this at the office.

DESIGN FOR THE TYPICAL WORKDAY AND THE UNEXPECTED SOMEDAY

Sometimes the job of a designer is to think inside the box and let their imagination run wild. The O Collection is a powerful tool to create dynamic and flexible spaces. It can help businesses bring their workers back to the office today, while being prepared for the future.

SOFT SURFACE SOLUTIONS

During the height of the pandemic, most organizations were looking for ways to keep people apart. The O Collection was designed to bring people together.

This carpet tile system facilitates a flexible floor design. The O Collection can be used to create distinct spaces for individual workers without barriers or bring people together for collaboration. The layout can change as an organization's needs change over the life of a lease. Put simply, the O Collection is a foundational step to future-proofing workplaces.

TAILOR THE WORK EXPERIENCE FOR MAXIMUM PRODUCTIVITY

Some people are more productive at the office, while others are more productive at home. Businesses should study this from an organizational level to the preference of each worker.

Make sure workers have both concentration and collaboration spaces.

Find the hybrid work models that fit your business. For example, make sure workers have both concentration and collaboration spaces at the office. Perhaps add more flexibility into the workweek, allowing for an optimal home/office balance. Ultimately, giving workers more choices will likely be an important aspect of the future of business.
